H. A. E. Jaehne Collection of Chinese Art

FOREWORD

Mr. Jaehne resided in the Orient for over seventeen years, during which time this collection was gradually formed. It is very difficult to find and secure rare objects of Chinese art in China itself, as the pieces are usually heirlooms that are parted with only under great duress of circumstances; for the Chinese well know the artistic and intrinsic value of their possessions, and themselves pay enormous prices for rare and choice examples.

Here one can trace the development of the potter's art in China from the slightly fired, unglazed gray clay ware, through the glazed pottery, early stoneware and porcellanous stoneware on to the technical perfection of porcelain in the eighteenth century.

In bronze are examples of the Chou and Han dynastics showing the archaic superseded by the early naturalistic treatment, and the various phases through which the artists in that medium have passed up to modern times.

The sculptor in stone is represented by several splendid heads and the charming small and intimate Buddhist sculptures, used as memorials to the departed, and called "stele." Some show a single figure in graceful attitude and flowing robes; others, groups of figures forming fine compositions—all extremely decorative and bearing witness to the slow development of the sculptor's knowledge of his medium.

The iron heads are exquisite in their refinement of line and modeling, and are the product of a highly perfected technique.

For the collector of snuff bottles there are examples in many different materials that have been cunningly wrought into a bewildering variety of forms and quaint conceits.

The textiles, especially the Imperial velvet throne carpets, are of the greatest rarity and splendor. Never before have so many of these choice pieces been displayed at one time; and without the overthrow of the Manchu Dynasty their presence here would have been an impossibility.

Nearly every phase of Chinese art is here represented in one form or another, and the whole forms a résumé of the life and culture of China that gives one an insight into that great nation which we are coming more and more to understand and to appreciate.
